THE NEWEST WAY TO STAY UP TO DATE WITH FACILITY RESOURCES

UPCOMING EVENTS

January 21st
Program Meeting
Leveraging Your Physical Workspace to Dominate the Fab Five

February 18th
Program Meeting
An Insider Look into Independence Center

February 25th
2020 UMKC Real Estate Symposium
Receive 10% off with code: LWREC10

March 17th
Program Meeting
Kansas City: Marketing the Dynamic Why Communication, Documentation Are Critical Components of FM Legacy

It's important to focus on strategic goals. Assuming your organization has a strategic plan, you should gaze into the future to see when and how facility management strategic objectives need to be tweaked or changed. Now is the time to spend time thinking about how you want your facility management organization to be viewed throughout the company.

Consider objectives covering asset management and facility management services delivery that are performance-driven, leading-edge, innovative, customer-focused, and energy-efficient. Communication is an important part of Save the Date!
April 29-30, 2020

Want to further your professional FM development but not sure where to start? This workshop will help you decide if you want to pursue the CFM certification. Regardless if you decide to pursue the CFM or perhaps the FMP or SFP, you will gain valuable information in this small, interactive group environment. Or perhaps you just need a refresher before taking the CFM exam. Plan to join us!

Quick Watch: 12 Ways to Improve Communications Skills Instantly

Serious Fun: How a Hotel FM Makes Saving Energy Enjoyable

Documentation and storytelling are the key components of an instruction manual to leave behind for future generations of staff. The more stories you tell and the more documentation you provide about how the organization functions, the more your legacy will be sustained. It is relatively easy to put together facility management storybooks because staff like to talk about “how it’s made” and what their contribution has been. The stories could be recorded oral histories about specific pieces of equipment or infrastructure within individual buildings, as well as picture books that profile a complex of buildings or floors within a single facility.

Online documentation of facility management policies, procedures, and practices is another component of the how-it’s-made story. Ensuring that policies, procedures, and practices are fully updated, streamlined, and accessible, that their upkeep has been assigned to appropriate staff members, and that users can access them online are tested measures of how you are remembered as a leader.

Regardless of your exit strategy timetable and your decision about when to share your departure date, you need to make yourself available to staff more now than ever before. It is a basic way to gather critical intelligence about your organization and your people, without giving away your plans for the future. You and your staff have had a long working relationship and now is the time to become a mentor and a better listener so they know they are part of the long-term vision for the organization and not just spokes in the wheel. The intelligence you gather during these open door sessions will assist you in crafting the institutional storybooks on how things work and leave a lasting memory of you as an engaged and empathetic leader.
Clean-up time
At one time in their careers, most successful leaders have made mistakes, irritated other leaders, and disappointed customers. Ric Kelly, a leadership specialist, in an article in Entrepreneur, points out that, to establish the kind of reputation a leader wants to have as a legacy, it is necessary to make the rounds and bag the trash that may have been left over the years. As you well know from being in an executive position for some time, companies have overactive rumor mills and the minute a facility leader walks out the door for the last time, those who feel they have been wronged by the individual will start to spread rumors that undermine a potentially sterling legacy. It makes sense at this juncture for you to swallow your pride for the good of your legacy and go bag your trash.

After you’ve done all the things described above, your facility management organization should be in excellent condition. At this point, with so much success, you may be thinking you might stick around for a while longer. Don’t second-guess your decision. You have mentally prepared yourself for a transition either to retirement or another employment opportunity and your good fortune at having established a lasting legacy should not be squandered by overstaying your welcome. The rumor mill probably has figured out you are leaving. Just as you have mentally prepared yourself for the next chapter in your life, your staff members also have prepared themselves for a working environment without you. Turn out the lights, lock your door, say your goodbyes, and don’t look back. Keep Benjamin Disraeli’s saying in the forefront of your mind: “The legacy of heroes is the memory of a great name and the inheritance of a great example.”

Courtesy of FacilitiesNet
Click here to login into our website as a member!
Check out other members, learn about our committees and see our calendar of upcoming events!